Something Old, Something New: Exploring the State of Marriage

There's been significant change, especially in the last decade. In Oregon, citizens remain in a contentious debate about how to define marriage generally. What do the debates about marriage—in this state and beyond—reveal about the institution as a whole? Why is a private relationship so publicly significant and contested? And why, when so many people are avoiding or dissolving marriages, do so many others wish to marry? This free conversation with Leslie Dunlap, professor at Willamette University, is hosted by PFLAG OCC and sponsored by Oregon Humanities.
